Data Analysis through Affinity Map V2.0

The Power to Decide

"The if someone have a very strong opinion, I will follow it, but I will even if it is different from me, I will follow it and afterwards I will say, oh look, my decision might be better, your decision is a shit, okay."
— Interview 1

"For example is the league of legends four of my teammates don't want to play. They want to surrender, but I don't want to surrender. I play a very key role and I'm very happy but but they want, they want to skip and it is not a ranked game. And I think it's fine, so I just surrender."
— Interview 1

"Uh, usually we just talk about it and, uh, figure something out."
— Interview 2

"Yeah, of course, because who play the best and who play the better and he can make the final decision, yeah, and he got the most influence because he play better, yeah."
— Interview 3

"Maybe the person who organized the session or probably the people who have more influence in the group. Oh, yeah."
— Interview 4

"Yeah, when we got a different decision, that's just who got the most influence, the person make the final decision, yeah."
— Interview 3

"Okay, well, I would say yes, definitely, because some people naturally have more influence than others. Some people play well and some others, for example, are really new in this game, then they will play badly. So it's quite often this situation."
— Interview 4

The Power to Evaluate

"Um, because most of the my my, uh, a teammate in game is my friend, so I I know how they played or what they're like say their level. The we I have I do have a like, uh, like an evaluation for most of the. And so. But I do have some concern because we have different target or different aim for games those and my, my purpose is to give a very harmonic phenomena while we played and we try our best and gain the happiness, so I won't evaluate a lot and all, let's say, in a very appropriate way."
— Interview 1

"Yeah, when we finish one round and my teammate make a mistake, I will also talk straight to point where he can do better or where he make a mistake and how to change, yeah."
— Interview 3

"Yes, if my teammates were very close to me, I will say very directly, very straightforward, if the teammate is someone I'm not acquainted with, maybe I will consider consider something like oh, he, because I don't know what he is thinking or what's is really level and we just keep it or observe."
— Interview 1

"Yeah, when we finish the match, we will review the match and we will comment who played the best, who made a mistake and who had a highlight. Yeah, and we can talk about who can make a greater, make it better, yeah."
— Interview 3

"I think joking about the game is fun, but attacking someone personally is not good and it's different."
— Interview 4

"Uh, yeah, I can talk about how they played it. Uh, but umm. I had many cubits about the game, like I might say someone played really well or made a bad decision or made a mistake, but I wouldn't really connect that to who they are as a person. So for me the game is just a game, so someone playing badly doesn't mean there's anything wrong with."
— Interview 2

"Yeah, I'd probably be okay giving some feedback. Especially some really exciting games and really amazing times we have seen more than other times."
— Interview 4

The Power to Say No

"Maybe just it's time? Yeah, it's time likely 11. Ah 11 or even 12 pm they will end or they have some other issues in their life. Yeah, yeah. So so they so basically they just said oh I want to sleep so oh I just. Yeah, yeah, okay, yeah."
— Interview 1

"Yeah, of course. When I feel tired and I want to go to sleep, and my friends want to continue to play games, and I can't reject, so we play together. Yeah, we play very funny."
— Interview 3

"It feels a little strange to just leave without saying anything. So mostly everyone would like to say something if they will quit."
— Interview 4

"Umm, yeah, sometimes I'm already thinking about stopping, but my friends are still having fun so they will say yeah come on, come on, one, one more game."
— Interview 2

"Well, when my friends want to leave earlier, we just detain them and let them play together."
— Interview 3

"If a close friend invites me, I might feel more pressure to stay. But if some others I don't familiar with, it's fine with me."
— Interview 4

"If leaving means they can't play anymore, I might probably feel bad."
— Interview 4

"If I'm playing with people I don't know that well, like, uh, the friends of my friends, uh, then I might think about it more because I'm, uh. Yeah, I'm I might not want to see directly that I'm worried or uh, don't want to pay anymore. I'm. Might stay until everyone else wants to stop, or sometimes I might come up with an excuse. So yeah, I can live with without making it, uh, awkward."
— Interview 2

"Yeah. Actually, I was already tired, but everyone else wanted to play another round. Yeah, then I would agree with them. So, I don't want to play anymore, but if they insist to let me play, then I will agree."
— Interview 4

Design Opportunity

1. Group decisions are often shaped by players with stronger opinions, higher skill levels, or greater social influence, while the opinions of less influential players may be overlooked.

2. Some players feel comfortable evaluating others, while others hold back because they don't want to create discomfort or disrupt the social atmosphere.

3. Players may have the ability to refuse or leave, but social pressure, team dependence, and the need to explain themselves can make saying no uncomfortable.